Pu Yong Marine Company (富榮水産公司), Wonsan.

Son Il Hung Op Sa (鮮一興業社), Wonsan, Simpo-dong, and Pyongyang.

6. Shipments for foreign trade from North Korea can be handled only through the agencies listed above. These firms average about twenty-three percent on their investments, of which they turn over fifteen percent to the North Korean government.

7. Individuals acting as traders between North and South Korea during late 1949 include the following:

CH'OE Ho-hak (崔浩鶴), Hongwon

PAK Kyong-son (朴景善), Hongwon

CH'OE Ho-pong (崔浩鳳), Hongwon

YANG Su-ho (梁壽鎬), Wonsan

CHONG Pok-tong (鄭福同), Pyongyang

YI Hak-su (李學洙), Songjin

HONG Sa-o (洪思梧), Hongwon

YI Song-suk (李成淑), Pyongyang

YI Yong-chun (李龍俊), Wonsan

KIM Chong-uk (金鍾郁), Hongwon

8. Very little regular trade has occurred between North and South Korea since August 1948, but there is an active smuggling traffic. The chief ports in the south involved in this are Pusan (129-02, 35-06) and Pohang (129-22, 36-02). Only one firm of any consequence is reported engaged in overland smuggling, the Sam Hung Commercial Company, Ltd., with offices on the third floor of the Kyong Hyang Press Building in Seoul, but its connections are not known.

9. The North Star Trading Company in Seoul, which was founded by KIM Song-sik (金星植), was not very active during his absence from Seoul. KIM, born in Cholla Province, is a Christian; he was formerly an employee of the Chinese customs service in Lungchingsun (129-26, 42-47). After the establishment of Manchukuo, he traded in Harbin and Mukden, then, following the end of the war, came to Korea and managed the Choson Correspondence Company, then started the North Star Company. Under threat of arrest, he left Korea for Hongkong, where he engaged in trade with North Korea. He returned to Seoul in fall 1949 after a personal assurance to his wife from President RHEE that he would receive no harm, but he is still under police suspicion.

10. The Li Min Company (利民公司), a Chinese trading company disguised as a Chinese Economics Investigating Commission, is active in North Korea. Until November 1948, the Chang Hung Trading Company (長興公司), a North Korean agency, was active in Dairen; it is not known whether it is still in operation.
